Tens of Thousands of Israeli Settlers Rally Urging Netanyahu's Ouster

Poll: 92% of Israeli Settlers Admit Defeat Against Iran

Talks Waste of Time: Iran Walks Out on Crazy Trump

TEL AVIV (Dispatches) – In a historic repudiation of Benjamin Netanyahu's military adventurism, an overwhelming 92.1 percent of Israeli settlers believe Iran emerged as the victor from the recent war and subsequent U.S.-Iran agreement, according to a poll published Sunday that lays bare the catastrophic failure of Israeli leadership.

The survey, conducted by the Hebrew University of Al-Quds in collaboration with the Agam Institute among 3,644 respondents between June 17 and 20, paints a devastating picture of Israel's strategic position.

Even among Netanyahu's right-wing voter base, 93.1 percent acknowledged that Iran has won. A staggering 82.9 percent of Israeli settlers believe the war weakened their illegal entity's long-term security, while 86 percent view the outcome negatively and 63.2 percent oppose the U.S.-Iran agreement.

The war, launched on February 28 in coordination with the United States, was sold to the Israeli settler public on three key promises: eliminating Iran's nuclear and ballistic missile threat, degrading Tehran's regional axis of resistance allies, and sparking regime change in Tehran.

None of these objectives have been achieved. According to the poll, 87.8 percent of Israeli settlers believe the Zionist entity failed to achieve any of its objectives.

Writing in the Guardian, veteran foreign affairs commentator Simon Tisdall delivered a blistering verdict: Netanyahu will be remembered as "the man who put the Middle East to the sword."

His "solution" to every problem—whether Hamas, Hezbollah, or Iran—was always the same: "extreme, often lawless violence that invariably made matters worse."

The unprovoked, illegal war against Iran was the ultimate expression of the Netanyahu doctrine—the disproportionate application of brute force—and it has failed spectacularly.

Israeli media have been equally scathing. Ynet, one of Israel's leading news portals, declared that "Iran has withstood serious attacks, and by drawing on its remaining strength, it has managed to bring the United States to its knees."

The portal added: "It was supposed to be the United States' best days as a world power, but the grandiose names of the operations against Iran, America's 'Epic Fury' and Israel's 'Roaring Lion,' have been shattered to pieces".

Perhaps the most significant strategic gain for Iran is the unprecedented rupture in U.S.-Israel relations. Tisdall reported that Trump and Netanyahu are "barely on speaking terms," with the U.S. president launching "profanity-laden personal attacks" on the Israeli leader. The White House blames Netanyahu for drawing the U.S. into an "unwinnable fight" on the basis of "glib predictions of easy victory and regime collapse".

Speaking after the G7 summit, Trump eviscerated Netanyahu's red lines. He declared Iran must be allowed to enrich uranium, has a right to ballistic missiles, and should have billions in frozen assets returned.

The U.S. backed Iran's demand for an immediate, permanent ceasefire in Lebanon—a position underscored by Vice President JD Vance, who ordered Netanyahu to stop fighting and warned that the U.S. is "the only powerful ally" Israel has left.

Israeli analysts have confirmed the catastrophic implications. Former intelligence officer Danny Citrinowicz described the U.S.-Iran deal as nothing less than a "political and security catastrophe for Israel."

Sima Shine, another former intelligence officer with Israel's so-called institute for security studies, noted that "the BÜRGENSTOCK, Switzerland (Dispatches) – Iran's negotiating team dramatically walked out of talks with the United States on Sunday in protest at "blatant threats" by President Donald Trump, who warned Tehran to stop its allies in Lebanon or face devastating new military strikes—and threatened to "take over the rest of the country"—plunging the fledgling diplomatic process into crisis.

The walkout followed Trump's belligerent statements on Truth Social and in a Fox News interview, including threats to "hit Iran very hard again, just like we did last week, only harder" if Tehran did not rein in Hezbollah.

In the Fox interview, Trump escalated his rhetoric dramatically. He warned Iranian President Masoud Pezeshkian to "better watch his mouth" and threatened: "He better shape up or we'll take over the rest of the country."

On the Strait of Hormuz, Trump warned Iranians that if they closed it, "you won't have a country" and "you won't even make it back to your f--- country". He also suggested the U.S. could become the "Guardian Angel" of the strategic waterway and "take 20% of the oil" or "collect tolls".

The Iranian delegation declared Trump's remarks a "flagrant violation" of Article 1 of the Islamabad Memorandum of Understanding, which explicitly requires the U.S. to refrain from issuing "threats" and to ensure "the immediate and permanent termination of military operations on all fronts, including Lebanon".

According to Article 13 of the MoU, any negotiating process depends entirely on implementation of Article 1.

A source close to the Iranian team confirmed to Tasnim that the delegation left the venue after the threats. Iran's Fars news agency reported that Trump's remarks had interrupted negotiations and cast uncertainty over whether talks would continue.

Hezbollah Chief: Iran Withstood Aggression, Emerged Stronger

BEIRUT (Dispatches) – Hezbollah Secretary-General Sheikh Naim Qassem declared on Sunday that Iran has emerged from the war with the United States and Israel "more powerful than ever", as Lebanese communities along major roads erected banners expressing gratitude to Tehran for insisting on a permanent end to Israeli aggression against Lebanon.

"The Islamic Republic, which single-handedly repelled large-scale aggression, has succeeded in humiliating America and Israel," Sheikh Qassem said in a televised address broadcast by Al-Manar TV. "Iran will emerge from the war with the U.S. with its head held high. It will become a pillar for all freedom-loving people in the world."

The Hezbollah chief emphasized that Iran has proven it will not retreat from its rights despite the enormous costs of the war.

"Iran withstood the aggression and emerged stronger than before the war. It is a supporter of the resistance, an ally to its neighbors and friends, and capable of ensuring collective security for the region's countries without needing America or its allies," he said.

Sheikh Qassem outlined three primary objectives of the U.S.-Israeli aggression against Iran—and declared that all had failed.

"Israel sought to end the resistance through its war on Iran but did not achieve this goal. The aggression failed to realize its objectives, even though the Zionist side remains hopeful of changing the situation," he said.

He specifically noted that Iran's uranium enrichment program remains intact, its missile program continues as a defensive capability capable of striking the enemy, and the Islamic Republic in Tehran remains firmly in place.

"Israel is an expansionist entity that will not be satisfied with all of Palestine's lands, nor with occupying the Golan and beyond—it seeks control over the entire region, as proven by events and facts," Qassem stated.

Across Lebanon, public displays of gratitude to Iran have emerged along major thoroughfares. Banners carrying messages of appreciation for Iran were displayed along the main road connecting Beirut to Rafic Hariri International Airport, one of the capital's busiest routes.

The banners featured images of the martyred Leader of the Islamic Revolution Ayatollah Seyyed Ali Khamenei and the current Leader, Ayatollah Seyyed Mojtaba Khomeini, alongside the message: "Thank you to loyal Iran."

According to local reports, the displays were intended to express appreciation for Iran's emphasis on the termination of Israeli aggression against Lebanon in the recently signed U.S.-Iran memorandum of understanding.

Ali Ammar, a member of the Loyalty to the Resistance parliamentary bloc, said Iran has consistently supported the resistance movement and remained committed to its pledges. "The Islamic Republic of Iran has proven its commitment to supporting the resistance and has always stood by it," Ammar stated.

Last Sunday, Hezbollah issued a formal statement expressing "profound gratitude" to Iran's leaders, forces and people "for their steadfast support of Lebanon, its people and
